Casino Plans Hinted

Journal Carson City Bureau

Carson City has been sounded out about the possibility of locating a casino at the Carson Mall site most recently occupied by the Disco department store.

City Planner John Hancock said Friday he was questioned in this regard by attorney Ted Stokes on behalf of Carson Mall owner Francis Carrington.

Hancock said he recommended against the enabling zone change because the site is surrounded by other commercial properties.

One apparent outgrowth of the inquiry is an April 29 public hearing before the Carson Regional Planning Commission to consider allowing gaming in a commercial zone with a special use permit.

The use permitt proviso is normally invoked to give the city a control over the specifics of particular development.

Hancock said the conversations with local casino owners indicated they felt the addition of more such establishments would help their business by attracting more people to the area.

Stokes declined comment regarding the Disco site and the alleged plans for it.
